sustain high industrial growth and export promotion have also increased. As a result, exports in 2005-06 grew by 25 per cent after the 26 per cent growth in 2004-05.

(c) and (d) Government is continuously monitoring the oil scenario and is making efforts to increase foreign direct investment (FDI) inflows and foreign institutional investment (FII) inflows. FDI upto 100 per cent is also allowed under automatic route: (i) for laying of natural gas/LNG pipelines, market study and formulation and investment financing in the petroleum and natural gas sector; and (ii) for setting up infrastructure relating to marketing in the petroleum and natural gas sector.

(e) and (f) In 2004-05 the share of exports in GDP at current market prices was 11.8 per cent. This share is expected to increase in the coming years since the rate of growth of exports is likely to continue the recent trend of outstripping the growth in GDP. The Foreign Trade Policy, 2004—09 envisaged doubling of India's exports in five years. Recent initiatives to enhance export growth include enactment of the Special Economic Zones (SEZ) Act, 2005 and notification of its rules, procedural simplification to reduce transaction costs of exports and greater economic cooperation with other countries through regional trade agreements.
